Verbal Description

What I believe this is, is a corner from a metate. It is roughly rectangular on on 2 sides, the underside curves up to meet the upper surface. There is a leg scar, 8.2×6.0 cm at the junction of these 2 finished sides. The other 2 edges are more perpendicular. This corner, as well as their edges, is rounded. To me it looks as though the sharp edges were deliberately rounded. On the finished working side there is a dip in the center. Given how large this metate ~~was~~ would have been in its complete state, it is unlikely that this depression is from the original use. The working surface is definitely ground down. I cannot assess the gloss because I did not wash it, to preserve the lot number. Not drawn
